It is as if Fidel, with his vision and ability to anticipate the challenges of the future, knew that the country would need science for the battles to come.

Six decades later, Covid-19 shows how right that phrase has proved to be, since it is the Cuban scientific community that keep fighting on the front line against a disease that is trying to tear out our parents, brothers and sisters, children, comrades... but the disease has met in our Cuba with the titans of these times, who even from other lands protect and save lives.

For that reason and for so many others, the Citizen's Portal of Holguin celebrates Cuban Science Day and congratulates the workers in the sector and those who in one way or another do science from their places. So much from the sanitation worker who moves surgical wastes, to the doctors of medical sciences and the technicians on duty today at the Molecular Biology Laboratory. To all of them, a strong hug. / By Institutional Communication Department.
